Two more millionaires hit the top ten this week, Mahan and Allenby. This week's winner at the Honda should complete the roster of all millionaires in the top ten. And we're still a month out from the season's first major. The moral of the story, get a golf club in your son's hands as early in life as possible.

GIR% still tracking well above last year's season ending numbers, although this past week it dropped just a touch. Average Money List Rank relative to last year continues to yield a healthy pay raise. I find it interesting that no player in last year's top ten made the top twenty in Money, and to this point in the season, there are two players in the top twenty in Money. Driving Accuracy Average Money List Rank remains flat to last year. In my opinion, this is starting to speak to the ineffectiveness of the Groove Rule. GIR% way up, and no premium on Driving Accuracy.

Driving Distance continues to bounce around, up 10 spots from last week. Notice that last year’s number 10, would presently slot in at number 2. Wet conditions so far this season may be a reason for this, but I’m also thinking the new golf balls might be having an effect. Total Driving slides down the Average Money List Rank another 5 spots this week. This has dropped 14 spots in the last two weeks.

PGA Tour Stat Leaders Avg. Money Rank

Of the stats we're tracking, Driving Accuracy is shaping up to carry the lowest premium. So far, it's flat-lining in last place. Total Driving appears to be trending down. And GIR% after a significant drop, appears to be on a steady climb. As you might expect Driving Distance appears to be the single stat with the most movement. If the long hitters have a good week and find some fairways, it looks like square grooves or not, they are pretty tough to beat.
